Latest News Developments

The South African Reserve Bank (SARB) keeps the repo rate unchanged at 3.5%, which resulted on the prime commercial lending rate thus remains at a five-decade low of 7%. The South African Reserve Bank (SARB) indicated that the recent unrest which recently took place in the country is likely to slow our ongoing recovery of the economy. SARB governor Lesetja Kganyago alleged that it was a unanimous decision by the Monetary Policy Committee (MPC) of the South African Reserve Bank (Sarb) to keep the repo rate unchanged at 3.5%. However, Lesetja Kganyago said the implied policy rate path of the quarterly projection model indicates an increase of 25 basis points in the fourth quarter of 2021 and in each quarter of 2022. The governor better anchored expectations of future inflation could keep interest rates lower for longer, and be realised by achieving a stable public debt level, increasing the supply of energy, moderating administered price inflation and keeping wage inflation low into the recovery. The governor Lesetja Kganyago indicated that the recent unrest and economic damage could have lasting effects on investor confidence and job creation. "The direct and indirect costs of these events will likely further slow South Africa's economic recovery. We estimate the unrest to have fully negated the 2021 Q1 (first quarter) growth outcome. In addition, Lockdowns and other restrictive measures that remain in place in a number of countries will continue to weigh on economic activity, particularly in sectors dependent on close contact, such as travel, tourism, hospitality and leisure.

The S&P Global ratings agency indicated that recent unrest in South Africa is likely to shave about 0.7% off headline GDP growth in 2021 but strong commodity prices will continue to support the economy. The protests in support of former president Jacob Zuma broke out this month when he handed himself over to authorities to start a 15-month jail term for contempt of court, and escalated into riots that killed more than 300 people and caused extensive damage to businesses and infrastructure. It is estimated that the unrest will likely shave about 0.7% off headline GDP growth in 2021, hit private consumption, and slow the pace of economic recovery. The S&P Global rating agency further highlighted that, if the unrest were to recur and last for a long time, this would further pressure the economy and potentially stifle the rebound. S&P Global ratings agency forecast that South Africa's economy will expand by 4.2% in 2021, which is more than the Treasury's February estimate of 3.3% growth. The ratings agency said it did not expect an immediate rating action, but if the unrest was repeated or prolonged, it could pose risks to ratings. In May, S&P affirmed South Africa's long-term foreign-currency rating of BB-, or three notches below the investment grade. It kept the country's local currency debt at BB, both with a stable outlook.
