Both local and international grain prices weakened for two consecutive weeks, with local white and yellow maize prices decreased by 0.9% and 2.0% respectively this week compared to the previous week. African maize prices were under pressure from lower US maize prices seen for most of the past week and the stronger rand that was seen towards the end of this week. During the same period wheat, soybean and sunflower seed prices also decreased by 2.9%, 2.3% and 0.6% respectively. On the international front, US yellow maize price decreased by 2.0% week-on-week. US maize prices traded mixed this week with old crop futures rising on export optimism and ongoing fears of South American crop shortfalls. Maize export shipments jumped to a marketing year high of 1 618 million tons. During the same period US wheat and soybean prices decreased by 8.6% and 0.9% respectively.

The rand depreciated by 1.9% against the US dollar this week compared to the previous week. The rand has fallen to its lowest level against the dollar in more than a year, as emerging market currencies struggle amid fears of a global slowdown in growth. But the local currency strengthened against the Pound Sterling by 1.0% week-on-week. During the same period the rand depreciated by 1.1% against the Euro.

Brent crude oil averaged $102.24 this week compared to the previous week, 3.5% less than $105,9 reported the previous week, as recession worries pushed the price of Brent oil back to $100. The rand's recent rally might not be enough to offset the effect of rising crude oil prices on local fuel prices next month. Crude oil prices have firmed amid risks of attacks on fuel storage facilities in the United Arab Emirates, conflicts in Yemen, and simmering Russia-Ukraine tensions.

Latest News Developments

South Africans are expected to face hefty fuel price and interest rate hikes in July, this will further worsen cost pressures on farmers and leave consumers with less money to spend on food. Motorists will face large fuel price hikes next week as the petrol levy cut falls from R1.50 a litre to 75c. Petrol prices will be hiked by R2.37 (93) and R2.57 (95) a litre, while diesel prices will rise by R2.31 (0.05% sulphur) and R2.30 (0.005% sulphur) a litre, the Department of Mineral Resources and Energy announced. In Gauteng, a litre of 95 petrol will cost R26.74. This is 54% more than a year ago, when it cost R17.39. Paraffin prices will increase by R1.66 a litre, while the maximum LPG retail price will fall by R2.18/kg. In April, government cut the petrol levy by R1.50 a litre in an effort to relieve the economic stress of surging fuel prices. But from Wednesday, this has been lowered to only 75c - and the full levy will take effect from next month. The levy relief is costing government billions. Local fuel prices are determined by international oil prices, as well as the dollar-rand value, as South Africa buys oil in dollars. South Africa's crippling power cuts are approaching an annual record and there are still six months to go. Spurred by an illegal strike this week that added to its woes. In addition to Eskom's schedule of rolling blackouts across South Africa, which reached Stage 6 in early July, farmers in Limpopo, North West and Mpumalanga have also been hit by severe and unscheduled power outages referred to as 'load reduction'. Deidre Carter, CEO of Agri Limpopo, said one of the organization's members had reported lost about 2 000 broiler chickens in a single day due to Eskom's unilateral load-reduction strategy, while another had decided to leave the poultry industry altogether.

South Africa's consumer confidence plunged to its lowest level in over three decades in the second quarter of 2022, barring the sharp drop during the height of Covid-19. The economic ramifications of Russia's war in Ukraine, soaring petrol prices, escalating inflation, high interest rates and the non-payment of the R350 social relief of distress (SRD) grant were all factors in the decline, according to FNB and the Bureau for Economic Research's (BER) Consumer Confidence Index (CCI) released on Wednesday. Having already slipped from -9 to -13 index points during the first quarter of 2022, the (CCI) plunged to -25 in the second quarter of 2022. The CCI did drop to -33 in the second quarter of 2020, when the pandemic and the lockdown pummeled sentiment. According to the Reserve bank governor Lesetja Kganyago, while the central bank's baseline scenario for increases of 25 basis points at each of its next three meetings remains, the possibility of lifting the repurchase rate by 50 basis points next month is not off the table. Forward-rate agreements, used to speculate on borrowing costs are now pricing in about 50 basis points of tightening at the next MPC meeting scheduled for July 21. The market anticipates 175 basis points of hikes in total by the end of the year.
